Lesson 7: Respecting others

Aim

To recognise the importance of treating other people with consideration and respect.

Learning outcomes

Children should be taught:

- to talk and write about their opinions, and explain their views, on issues that affect themselves and society;
- to reflect on ... social and cultural issues, using imagination to understand other people's experiences;
- to appreciate the range of national, regional ... and ethnic identities in the United Kingdom;
- that their actions affect themselves and others, to care about other people's feelings and to try to see things from their points of view;
- to realise the nature and consequences of racism, teasing, bullying and aggressive behaviours ...;
- that differences and similarities between people arise from a number of factors, including cultural, ethnic, racial and religious diversity, gender and disability.

Resources

• Activity sheet RRR7a: Respectful and disrespectful behaviour

Activity

Begin by recapping on what the children already know about respect, summarising some of the lessons learned. Remind the children that it means never being mean or hurtful; treating others in the way that you would like them to treat you; and that therefore the best way to tell whether you're being respectful of other people's feelings is to ask yourself: 'Is this how I'd want someone to talk or behave towards me?'

Ask:

Key Questions

Discuss the responses.

Point out that:

- some people are not always shown respect in this way. This may happen for a number of reasons; often it is because of things over which they have no control, such as their ethnicity, their gender or their sexual orientation;
- whether in our families, school or communities, there will be many times when children come across people with a different background, life experience and way of life to themselves.

Invite ideas on how members of the class should deal with such situations. Ask them to consider how they would feel if someone spoke to or behaved towards them in a disrespectful, hurtful, inconsiderate or unkind way. Ask them to imagine how it would feel to be different – the victim might be isolated, lonely, sad, etc. This point can be developed by mentioning teasing, taunting or bullying other children because of disability, skin colour or sexual inclinations.

Explain that everyone has the same capacity to suffer pain; emotional or physical – and that before saying or doing anything that might make someone feel worse, it is a good idea for any of us to try to 'walk in their shoes'. This will remind us of the need to be respectful of others.

Ask:

Key Questions

How might you show respect towards someone who is a newcomer to the class or is in some way different to other people?

(NB: You may wish to phrase this question differently depending on the composition of the class.)

Look for responses such as trying to include and involve them in activities; being friendly, polite and thoughtful. Write on the board the suggestions made, leading children to the idea that the way to deal with the situation is to try to get to know and understand the person better. They will come to realise that - whatever their differences - in most respects children are all the same.

Remind the children that in behaving respectfully towards other people, they are really practising the message in the Golden Rule, which by this time they are likely to have come across and discussed. Ask:

Key Questions

What is the Golden Rule? How might you try to follow it in your life at home, at school and in the community?

Discuss the answers, encouraging children to a definition such as 'treating others as we ourselves would like to be treated'. Ask them for examples of how this applies in the three situations in the second question.

Suggest some ways of showing respect to other children and following the Golden Rule that have not been mentioned - you might make use of the 'dos' and 'don'ts' list on Activity sheet RRR7a: Respectful and disrespectful behaviour.

Explain that the Golden Rule is what respect is all about and that respect needs to start with the individual. There is an old saying that 'to get respect, you have to give respect'.

Refer again to the activity sheet. Discuss the statement at the top of the page to illustrate the importance of us all showing respect to each other. Then, operating in pairs with a copy of the sheet, the children should discuss the issues raised in the rest of the sheet, reporting back to the rest of the class.

In a plenary session, remind the class about the theme of the lessons on Respect, everyone's right to be treated with respect. Reinforce why this is important and why we should be able to accept points of view and lifestyles which are different to our own. Devise a working agreement, to be applied in all future lessons, that children always listen to, and respect, each other's views and opinions and show equal regard to everyone in the class.

You may also wish to consult the Guidelines for handling SRE lessons in Part 1 (pages 140 and 181).

Further suggestions

Ask the children to bring into school any articles or pictures from catalogues, magazines and newspapers that show people of any disability, gender, colour or creed taking part in activities which suggest they are getting on or working well together – in other words, showing respect. Some of these items can be discussed in a follow-up lesson or a spare few minutes. They could be displayed on a classroom banner or board space, with a heading such as Respect in action.

To promote an understanding of, and respect for, the diverse backgrounds of people in the locality, children could design a flyer to inform parents and friends that there will be a multi-cultural exhibition in school. This would invite parents to send in examples of their cultures and faiths to display on a class table, such as food, drink, clothing and accessories, aids to worship, holy works, etc. Some parents might be willing to come into school to talk about their lifestyles and beliefs, or give a cookery or dancing demonstration. Any money raised from these activities could go to the school to purchase equipment and games that promote multicultural understanding and respect (or to a charity of this type).

Choose a scenario or invite children to choose one that involves someone showing respectful behaviour at home, in school or in a public place such as a café, a shop or a music festival. They write a story based around their chosen situation. Some SEN children might prefer to draw a picture instead of writing a story.
